MASTER OF SCIENCE IN NURSING GRADUATES IMPACT CARE THROUGHOUT HEALTH SYSTEMS – Alumni Spotlights

Mercy College's summer Master of Science in Nursing graduates developed evidence-based leadership projects that are under consideration to be implemented throughout the health systems the graduates work in.

Elia Stanko (pictured left), Director of Associate Health in Occupational Health at St. Elizabeth - Youngstown Hospital, developed a project entitled “Violence Against Healthcare Workers” that focuses on a process of prevention and reporting of violence in the workplace.

Jeffrey Moomaw, Director of Nursing at Mercy Health - Allen Hospital, developed a Digital Based Discharge Planning Tool which will better prepare patients to care for themselves after hospitalization, understand their disease process, and know what they can do to improve their health and prevent readmissions.

Amanda Selman (pictured left), Nursing Manager of Surgical Services at Mercy Health - Fairfield Hospital, developed a project entitled “Surgical Smoke: The Invisible Enemy in the OR” that focuses on ways of effectively reducing surgical smoke to ensure clean air for everyone in the operating room.

Cindy Myerholtz (pictured left), Regional Educator-Newborn Intensive Care at ProMedica - Russell J. Ebeid Children's Hospital, focused on a project entitled “Improving Perinatal Nurses’ Perceptions and Attitudes When Caring for Mothers with Substance Abuse” with outcome measures of decreasing nurse’s stress, increasing parent involvement and improving the nurse-patient relationship.

Tina Allgood, Nursing Manager of the Stroke Unit at Mercy Health - Lorain Hospital, created a Fall Reduction Protocol for the stroke unit, identified that minority populations experiencing strokes often do not receive care in time to receive recombinant tissue plasminogen activator (tPA), and created outreach to trusted members of communities to provide stroke education.
